EXPLANATORY NOTES

This bill entrusts the responsibilities currently held by the construction industry commissioner to the Commission des relations du travail and abolishes the office of construction industry commissioner; it eliminates the possibility of seeking advice from the construction industry advisory committee and abolishes that committee.

The bill contains provisions that affect how the Commission des relations du travail operates. It provides that the Commission consists of two divisions, namely, the construction industry and vocational qualification division and the labour relations division, and identifies the proceedings to be heard by each division. It also relaxes the rules governing the conciliation process and the approval of agreements that may be reached by the parties.

In addition, the bill gives the Commission des relations du travail the power to dissolve an employee association that participated in the contravention of prohibitions against dominating an employee association or interfering in the activities of an employee association. As well, it shifts the responsibility of acting as the depositary of collective agreements and arbitration awards from the Commission to the Minister of Labour.

The bill specifies that health and social services agencies are public services within the meaning of the Labour Code as regards the maintenance of essential services. It furthermore allows the Minister of Labour, on application, to arrange arbitration in a dispute relating to the negotiation of a first collective agreement, even if a conciliation officer has continued working with the interested parties since the application was made. The bill also contains a number of technical provisions and consequential amendments.
